[The Japanese have a legend to the effect that the dewy juices in the heart of kiku, or chrysanthemum, are the clixir of life. The following translation from a native poet, Ba-tomi Sensi, touches upon this point.]

O bloom of chrysanthemums, Fabled of old, A fountain of rapture And sweetness untold!

The dewy wine sparkled With life in its flame, And mortals partaking Immortal became. But, lo, there hath opened A wonderful flower, For Got's love hath blossomed, Soul life is its dower.

And its petals shall shine More enduring than thine With their fabulous treasures of life giving wine For fairyland's store.

And its dewdrops shall glow, And its fragrance shall grow From more unto more While the years come and go.

A LOVE CHASE.

"Tomorrow on the Paris?" cried Carer, dropping his cane on the pavement ith a resounding thud.

"Yes, tomorrow," said I, gazing with astonishment on my friend, for my commonplace gossip had apparently perturbed him greatly. "The whole family are going to sail, and they will be away for a year. It's very sudden." "Sudden! I should say so!" he exclaimed. He looked thoughtfully up the avenue for a moment, then stammered, "Miss Margaret too?"

"Yes."

Thereupon he hailed a passing cab, and before I could get another word with him dived into the vehicle and quickly disappeared with it.

Carter is not a bad fellow. He is ex-ceedingly modest. This is a most unusual characteristic for a young man who is spending a fortune gathered by another's talents, but to so great a degree does he possess it that it seemed to him impossible that Margaret Walcott should look upon him with other than indifference or even repugnance

'Why, Vandergust," he said to me one Sunday afternoon, when he had dropped in on his way to her house ridiculous to suppose that a bright girl like that could care for a fellow like mc—a fellow who doesn't know anything, who has not a striking point except money-when there are so many nen with brains about."

But, acting on my advice, he actually started to propose that very afternoon.
"Miss Walcott," he began as they sat by the fireplace in the drawing room talking commonplaces, "I'm in love." "Really! How interesting!" cried the girl, calmly leaning toward him and gazing at him, awaiting the rest of his revelations. There was a long silence, during which Carter carefully drew his left glove on his right hand. Having recovered his courage, he continued naively:

"I know who it's with. Do you know who it's with?"

"Yourself," she cried, clapping her hands as though she had made a wonderful discovery.
"Ob, dear, no! Never!" he stammer

ed. "Positively not. You really don't think so, do you?" 'I was just guessing," she replied soothingly.

"Guess again," said he quickly.
"With Livia Vandergust," ventured Miss Walcott after she had given the matter due consideration, gazing meditatively into the fire, thus unconsciously howing to Cayter the fine profile of her showing to Carter the fine profile of her face, which glowed in the red light of the coals.
"Don't accuse me of it," cried my friend in a deprecating tone that was most uncomplimentary to my charming cousin. "Guess somebody nearer home.

And the foolish fellow kept her guessing the name of every girl in town but the right one until the maid brought in

Was it a wonder that, knowing these facts, I smiled when I saw Carter dash away in a cab after I had imparted to him the news? It was sufficient to send him up the steps of the Walcott house in three bounds when his cab drew up there. Miss Walcott was out. "At teas?" he ventured to inquire of the maid. "Yes." Here arose a predicament. He knew of no less than five that afternoon.

But he had heard that she was to be at the Trumptons' dinner that night, and his sole chance of seeing her lay in finding her that very afternoon or following her over Europe

So he started in at Mrs. J. Anderson Oglesby's and most perfunctorily paid his respects to that energetic woman and her extremely plain daughter. Then he searched every corner of the crowded drawing rooms and even took a surreptitious glance into the butler's pantry.

"Isn't that Miss Walcott yonder?" he said to the young girl who was pouring tea, indicating a mass of black hair that was conspicuous in the crush.
"Why, no," she cried, gazing at him in astonishment, "She has light hair. And, besides, she left hours ago. I should think"—

The rest of the remark was lost on my friend, who dashed from the room and the house and was off in his cab once more. He searched in vain for her at the Partridges', the Joneses' and the Van Blunders' and at length reached the house of my aunt, who was on that afternoon performing the arduous physical ciety. Great, mucea, was my cousin's astonishment when Bennington Carter was announced, for she knew that he abhorred teas. But greater still was her amazement when he let fall the hand she held out to him, turned suddenly, eraned his neck so as to see over the knot of women about the door and dashed madly from the room.

Carter had seen her at last, but it was only a glimpse as the door closed upon her. He rushed up the stairs to the dressing room and bounded down again

"Which way did Miss Walcott's car-riage go?" he cried to the man who called his conveyance for him.
"Up Fifth avenue, sir," replied that astonished man. "After it!" exclaimed Carter, jumping in and slamming the door.

The bewildered Jehu swung his vehi-cle around the corner and dashed up the avenue, crowded with carriages. Eight blocks, however, told on the beast, and the driver found it expedient to draw up at the curb and hold a colloquy with his

The man pierced the gloom with his eyes and at length pointed meaningly with his whip down a side street to a residence in front of which a score of carriages were gathered and an awning stretched from curb to curb.

"At it!" cried the fare. Carter quickly ascended the steps of the strange house, boldly passed the servants in the hall, left his coat and hat up stairs and returned to the draw-

"Carter, Carter, Carter?" muttered the overdressed but kindly looking woman who greeted him there, tapping him on the arm with her fan and giv-ing him a hearty shake of the hand. 'I'm delighted to see you, Mr. Carter.' It was awfully kind of you to come," said the slender young girl at her side as he formally greeted her. And when he passed on she whispered to her mother: "I'm sure I didn't send him cards. Why, it's Bennington Carter!" My friend forced his way through a crowd of people he did not know and muttered imprecations on himself for wasting precious time at such a place. She would never be here. He would slip out at once. What! Could he believe his eyes? Yonder she sat in a cozy corner of dining room, a tall young man bending over her.

"Why, Mr. Carter!" she cried as he rushed breathlessly up to her.
"How in the world did you happen to come here?" he exclaimed.
"S-sh!" The young man moved

'I'm very glad to see you. Mr. Denby, "I've followed you all ever town," exclaimed Denby, totally oblivious of the presence of hindespised rival. "But "I'm so sorry," she said, moving to-
